Palmitoyl Tripeptide 5 A tripeptide with a unique sequence that mimics the body's own mechanism to activate Transforming Growth Factor (TGF-beta), known as the key element in the synthesis of collagen.

Dipalmitoyl Hydroxyproline A lipid-soluble amino acid that is essential in collagen synthesis. It works with ascorbic acid to increase collagen synthesis.

Dipeptide Diaminobutyroyl Benzylamide Diacetate A synthetic peptide capable of relaxing facial expression wrinkles by inhibiting muscle contraction. Imitates the activity of Waglerin 1, a protein found in the venom of the Temple Viper, which inhibits neuromuscular communication.

Gamma Aminobutyric Acid When administered systemically, it functions as a neuromuscular inhibitor which reduces excitability of the nerves and produces muscle relaxation.

Hyaluronic Filling Spheres Dehydrated filling spheres penetrate into skin folds of varying depth and trap water in the superficial layers of the skin. The remarkable characteristic of hyaluronic acid that acts as a molecular sponge, enables the spheres to swell and exert pressure in the direction of the surface, resulting in a smoothing effect on the skin.

Ubiquinone (Coenzyme Q10) Effectively counteracts free radical damage and provides significant protection against UVA-induced detrimental effects of photoaging. Coenzyme Q10 works synergistically with vitamin E in preventing damage to lipid membranes and plasma lipids.
